C.W. Williams Community Health Center Awarded $500,000 Grant for New Medical Facility in Charlotte

CHARLOTTE – SECU Foundation has awarded a $500,000 capital grant to C.W. Williams Community Health Center (CWWCHC) to support the construction of a new medical facility that will serve low-income and uninsured residents in a nine-county region of southwest North Carolina. The new facility will expand the non-profit's reach to 25,000 patients annually, a 92% capacity increase.

CWWCHC, a Federally Qualified Community Health Center, reports that more than 20% of their area's population lives in poverty. Its data shows 42% of their patients are uninsured and 66% live on incomes below 200% of the federal poverty level. Through the new facility, CWWCHC will provide a comprehensive care model that integrates primary, preventative, educational, and support services in one location, reducing barriers to care.

"The C.W. Williams Community Health Center has been an important resource for southwestern North Carolina since 1981, providing reliable, high-quality care for marginalized populations," said SECU Foundation Board Chair Chris Ayers. "We are pleased to support the construction of this state-of-the-art facility, which will help them increase capacity and meet the growing needs for their services."

"As we continue to grow and flourish, C.W. Williams Community Health Center continues to provide the best quality health care and social services," said CWWCHC CEO Debra Weeks. "This year, thanks in part to SECU Foundation, we will focus on nutritional health, maternal health, and behavioral health, making a positive impact in communities that are struggling. Funding is leveraged across every facet of our operations, so this grant will be reinvested in services and staffing to ensure quality healthcare to all, regardless of their ability to pay."
